A graphic idea of what the British "Tommy" have had to endure for the past few weeks of bad weather is presented in this picture, which shows some members of a famous British regiment taking advantage of a lull in the fighting to renovate their trenches. EVERYBODY IN EUROPE FIGHTING OR KNITTING.

All Europe is knitting for the soldiers at the front. The frosty nights of winter, which chill to the bone the busy men in the trenches, are but a foretaste of the rigors that will go with winter campaigning. As there can't be too many mufflers, chest protectors, abdominal bands and socks to make the men comfortable, the women of Europe are making their needles fly every spare moment. One of the big London hotels explains the decline in its restaurant patronage as due to worry over the war and lack of exercise among the women, the latter condition being the result of their remaining too much in their own rooms knitting for the soldiers. That is to be overcome by means of hotel concerts, which will draw the women out of their rooms to knit in a musical atmosphere with the hope that this will tend to stimulate their appetites. In the United States thousands of women who have relatives and friends among the warring nations, or who have been touched by the sufferings of the Belgians, are equally busy with their needles. Occasionally one sees knitting needles flying at a concert, so that some music lovers have entered complaint about the clicking of the needles. Even men are at it. If men mastered the art, which is an exceedingly simple one, they might knit many a muffler while enjoying their after-dinner cigars.—Francis Frear in Leslie's.

CHAS. L. UNDERWOOD LAID TO REST THURSDAY

The funeral of Charles Lewis Underwood, who was born in Sharon, Tenn., Feb. 19, 1858 and died in Ogden, Tuesday morning, was held at the family home on Twenty-second street yesterday at 2 p. m., Rev. H. D. Zimmerman of the First Baptist church and Rev. G. W. Russell of the First Methodist church officiating. Miss Laird sang "He Giveth His Beloved Sleep" and "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere."

Mr. Underwood had been a sufferer from Bright's disease for eight years, but was not bedridden, and, until within a few hours before his death, talked with his family and seemed almost as well as usual until he fell asleep and, a few hours later, passed on to the Great Beyond without awakening.

He is survived by his wife and two sons, Professor Walter L. of Ogden and William I. of Canyonville, Ore. Mr. Underwood was a kind and loving husband and father, and a loyal citizen, greatly esteemed by all who knew him, which was manifested by the many friends who came to pay their last tribute of respect, and the great floral offering which completely covered and surrounded the casket.

Besides rearing his two sons, Mr. Underwood gave a home and father's love to two nephews, Relma and Jesse Tansil, now grown to young manhood, who, with the devoted wife and son Walter, were at his bedside when he died.

Burial was at Mountain View cemetery.

WORLD'S MARKETS

New York, Jan. 22.—Stocks showed some uncertainty at the opening, a few of the leaders recording slight losses, but a fresh buying movement soon set in with the result that some of yesterday's high prices were speedily regained. Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Lehigh Valley, St. Paul, Louisville and Nashville, New Haven and New York Central rose a point. Exceptions to the general tendency were Canadian Pacific and Smelting, which lost a point. Reading and Pennsylvania manifested some early heaviness, but the entire list strengthened by the end of the half hour.

London, Jan. 22.—Home rails and Americans monopolized attention on the stock exchange today. American securities made further gains in sympathy with the strength in Wall Street yesterday. Business was brisk in Erie and Canadian Pacific. Prices were well maintained throughout and the market closed firm.

BOYLEFURNITURECO.

WATER A GOOD HEALTH DRINK.
(By Harriet Taylor)

Many bodily discomforts are suffered by most of us, a doctor says, because of several common faults in drinking. Some people drink too much, others too little, and nearly everybody drinks at improper times. Perhaps the fault attended with the worst consequences is that of taking far too little plain water. Of course, I do not take into consideration the greater fault of consuming too much alcohol. I am concerned with the average normal man and woman, who, early in life, began by drinking to relieve thirst, but gradually developed habits of drinking tea, coffee, and other tasty beverages to gratify the appetite or pleasantly stimulate the nervous system.

How much should we drink? I cannot lay down one rule for everybody. The amount depends largely on a person's constitution, occupation, amount of exercise, quality of food taken, state of the weather, etc. But a fair average for a full grown man is three and a half to four pints of fluid per day. He gets at least one pint of this in his solid food, so there remains to be drunk only two and a half or three pints. Women require less, say two pints, and children need more in proportion to their size. Most people will feel better if they keep near this amount than if they take more or less.

But each individual must use his discretion. If eating much vegetable and fruit, less drink is required; if living luxuriously, more liquid, and especially plain water is needed.

When perspiration is free in hot weather, when one spends much time in a hot room, or when he takes a great deal of exercise, he wants more than the average. In cold weather it is best to reduce the quantity, as the skin is inactive and the kidneys have to do increased work. In damp, muggy weather we get rid of less water by the lungs and skin, and we should drink less; in dry weather the contrary happens and we should drink more.

If the stomach is dilated, a common affection, especially among vegetarians, one should drink as little as possible. He should also drink less if the heart is diseased or the arteries are growing old. On the other hand, old people eat less vegetables and fruit, and they should make up for the loss of fluid by drinking more provided no organic disease forbids. Probably the best general rule for different ages is that children should be allowed to drink as much water as they like, that healthy young adults should avoid excess, but otherwise give no thought to the matter, and that people turned 40 should begin to be careful. A feeling of weight in the stomach or a general heaviness and depression is often a sign that too much fluid has been drunk.

The worst time to drink is at meals. Plain water or weak whisky and water, or even very weak tea, may not, as is popularly supposed, diminish the action of the gastric juices. But let any one put it to the test, and he will find that they do in some way delay digestion and make it less comfortable. To take one or two cups of tea at breakfast, one-half or one pint of beer, wine, water, etc., at luncheon, and so on, is to reduce mental and physical activity and to create a sense of discomfort for a long time.

In most affairs I think the less we live by rule the happier we are and the longer we put off the grip of old age. But in this matter of drinking there is no doubt that observance of the foregoing rules would keep people in better health and spirits.

In winter none but the young and healthy should drink cold liquids. Between meals in warm weather they will rarely do harm, even to delicate people, beyond causing a little pain sometimes. At or after meals they stop digestion for a short time. In hot weather a cold drink is on rare occasions seriously injurious, but as a rule it does no harm. Hot water is better than cold the first thing in the morning, because it washes mucus and other matters out of the stomach. It also stimulates the liver, and it is a good remedy for constipation. In people over 40 it helps greatly to remove waste products.

A LOAN.
If you lend money to a friend
It may or may not hurt you—
But gives you practice to the end
Of virtue.

His promise that he will repay
Seems tenuous as a wreath,
But you'll believe the things he'll say,
That's faith.

The months roll on. He doesn't pay.
Your comfort is the hope:
"Oh, well, he'll square things up some day!"
That's hope.

The years roll by as like as not.
The thought strikes you with clarity.

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN PRISONERS IN WILDS OF NORTHERN ONTARIO EARN KEEP

German and Austrian aliens are being interned in concentration camps at various points in Canada. The interned prisoners have been set to useful public work—clearing land and building roads—and the Canadian officials find that they earn their keep and a little besides. The photo shows a batch of prisoners airing their bedding at Petawawa, Canada's permanent military camp, situated in the wilds of northern Ontario.
